Review

Carol D. Wickstrom, University of North Texas: “It looks at a wide range of readers and writers, is grounded in theory but does not over tax the reader with so much theory that it becomes impossible to negotiate so that it remains engaging.”

Lynn Saffer Domino, Florida Atlantic University: “Most chapters are easily read and by asking the reader to reflect, it gives them insightful skills into the reading process.”

Janet Towell, Florida Atlantic University: “It’s comprehensive (reading skills and strategies) and there are some good examples of case studies.”

From the Back Cover

In this comprehensive, classroom-based guide, an emphasis on the careful observation of students in many types of reading and writing activities combines with the development and application of teachers’ diagnostic insights to help reading educators plan appropriate instruction. Here, well-known authors and teacher educators Rebecca Barr, Camille L. Z. Blachowicz, Ann Bates, Claudia Katz, and Barbara Kaufman provide an unrivaled wealth of actual case studies with a sound theoretical foundation, solid research, and a developmental perspective of literacy to give educators the knowledge and skills they need to assess students’ reading and writing abilities, and plan instruction accordingly.
